Of What do I Think.

Of what do I think?
The roll of years,
The waste of life, the wash of tears,
The beat of storms, the fall of snow,
The throb of pain, the thrill of woe.

Of what do I think?
The bud of Spring
The glow of thought, the broken ring,
The lonely heart, the wordless prayer,
The soul's unhoping, dumb despair.

Of what do I think?
Of mental strife,
A cheated love, a wasted life,
Duration's pang of vain regret,
A blasted sun in darkness set.

Of what do I think?
Of severed ties,
A desert waste and dreary skies,
A tread-mill sameness, round and round,
And desolation's dark profound.

Of what do I think?
The war of life,
With overruling fates at strife,
The will that ebb'd with waning years
And disappointment's outcast tears.

Of what do I think?
Of thorns a wreath,
Oblivion's sad, inglorious death,
A grave unear'd for and alone,
To love and memory both unknown.

A Useful Dog.

The sweetest and most original study for a dog story is given to the voracious exchange-scissors of the American press by the Reading Times and Dispatch. The owners of the faithful hound are man and wife, each sixty years of age. The man was born deaf and dumb and the woman became deaf when about six years old. He converses in the sign language, and she is able to hold extended talks with a few intimates by watching closely the movements of their lips. Sher also, somehow, manages to answer calles, inquirias. They have a pet dog that is an essential element in their domestic life. As neither of the old people can hear, the dog becomes by his superior instinct a means of communication. When the door bell rings it will go up to its mistress, and pull her dress, then run before her toward the door. The dog has learned to know the time of the arrival of the milkman who serves them, and can actually distinguish the sound of the milkman's bell. The dog will sit in the attitude of attention, head up and ears thrown forward, as soon as it catches the first notes of the bell, and will wait until the milkman has driven in front of the house before it moves. At the ringing of the bell or gong it will go to her, and by signs or pulling her dress announce the milkman's arrival. She fully understands its movements, and, prnce ded by the dog will go to the milk wagon, obtain the day's supply, hold a brief conversation with the man, and return to her domestic duties.

Astonishing Faith.

Old-fashioned Englishmen believe that a promise should be kept. A London correspondent tells of one of these men, who would as soon hang himself as break his word:

About eleven or twelve years back Mr. Disraeli was in Leeds, and he was waited upon by the secretary of a certain institution in that town, who asked him to give a lecture or an address. He first made several excuses, then refused utterly, and, at last, being further pressed, said, "Well, I will come and give you an address this time ten years."

With that assurance the secretary went away and waited. The ten years rolled along, and on their expiration he came to London, sought and obtained an interview with the Premier, reminded him of his promise, and claimed its fulfillment.

The great man had of course, forgotten all about the matter, and when it was brought to his recollection he again made polite excuses, pointed out that circumstances in the meantime had greatly changed and that he had other duties to attend to now.

But the secretary was an old fashioned man; he had the curious and obsolete idea that a promise was a promise, and ought to be carried out, and said as much.

"And did you really believe at that time," said his Lordship, "that I should carry out that promise?"

"Certainly," was the reply, "if you were still alive and able to do it."

"Well," said the Premier, in a musing tone, "it is truly astonishing what faith people have in me."

He did not deliver the lecture, and is still therefore, considered to have broken his word by the secretary of the institution.

In Germany large quantities of glucose, or "grape-sugar," are made from old linen rags. The rags are converted into dextrine by treatment with sulphuric acid. This is washed with a lime solution, when the addition of stronger sulphuric acid changes the dextrine of the glucose. The process is economical, but popular taste revolts against the use of sweets from old rags, even though the product is chemically identical with the best grape sugar. As a consequence the interference of the German government with this industry is anticipated.

The earth turns upon its axis with a surface velocity of over one thousand miles at the equator, while at the poles the rate is reduced to zero. A scientific gunner states that under special circumstances heavy guns with long ranges have to be corrected for the different rate of rotation of the earth at the place from which one is fired and at the point where the shot falls, which difference may cause as much as two yards deflection to one side or the other in firing north or south. The earth's rotation is thus actually made visible.

Mr. Bliss, a conductor on the Rock Island railroad, is only five feet in height, and Mr. Henry, a passenger, is seven. Henry put his ticket in his hat band and stood up straight when the little conductor came along. Bliss could not reach the ticket, even by standing on his toes, and his comical efforts made the passengers laugh uproriously; but without changing countenance, he brought a step-ladder, leaned it against the big man, climbed up to the ticket, and then went on as though nothing had happened.

The London Truth exhorts: "Let it be remembered that the ordeal of a wedding is quite as trying to a man as to a woman.

Severe Critics.

Children are severe critics sometimes, because they are apt to tell the truth, which, as we know, should not always be spoken. They approach you under the guise of friendliness. They love you; they want to kiss you, and, of course, if you are a woman, you cannot resist that appeal. And, after they have kissed you, they will show how observing they are by remarking, among themselves, on your eyes, nose and mouth. Have you a mole or freckles on your face, your small critic comments on the facts, and wonders how they came there. Have you incipient crows' feet at the corners of your eyes, the small critic notices them, and asks you who puckered you up so. Little peculiarities which you flattered yourself no one ever observed are ruthlessly forced out by them. Have you torn your dress, and contrived some trimming to hide the rent, the small critic becomes in some mysterious way the possessor of the secret, and draws everybody's attention to it by asking what you put such a funny little patch on there for. He will notice if your hands are large, and he is interested as to the size of the shoe you wear; and he will want to know how old you are, and if your hair grows on your head, and who pulled out your eyebrows, and a thousand and one other items of the same general character. Where there are lovers a small critic is a fiend. He will be sure to let out everything which should be kept private; and, if Sallie rouges and puts glycerine on her hair, he will tell Henry of it at once; and, if Henry's whiskers are dyed, and his hair is getting thin on the top of his head, the small critic will announce the fact before the whole family, and then beg for 5 cents to buy candy with. Truly, he is a troublesome comfort.

Webster on Bunker Hill.

As a boy, clinging to my father's arm, I stood on Bunker Hill, where stood at the same time most of Massachusetts—in fact, most of the American nation, if reckoned, by quality—and listened to Daniel Webster when the top stone of the monument was laid. The experience was in the power of a single sentence, and that sentence which probably does not appear in any of Mr. Webster's published works. The oration had not yet begun, and the vast crowd pressing to get near the orator, finally in their impetuosity pushed back the lines of military, and as in my vicinity, the guards held their muskets horizontally against the breasts of the people they were swept away by the crowd, who knocked up the muskets, hitting breech and bayonet right and left, and pouring forth in such masses as threatened to trample those in front to death. In vain the master of ceremonies entreated them to fall back, for there was an oceanic swell behind that fairly flung those in advance toward the stand. At last he begged Mr. Webster himself to come forward and plead with the tumultuous crowd. He arose, advanced a step or two toward us and said: "Gentlemen, you must fall back!" "Mr. Webster, it is impossible! It is quite impossible, Mr. Webster!" shouted a thousand voices at once. Then the Jupiter Thonans burst forth. Raising his arms and his voice, as his burning eyes flashed upon the excited multitude before him, he exclaimed: "Gentlemen, nothing is impossible to Americans on Bunker Hill!" A great shout thundered through those thronging thousands, and they surged back like waves from the shore. That was eloquence, or, rather, to use Webster's immortal language, it was something higher, nobler than all eloquence—action, noble, sublime, God-like action.

A darkey was once attempting to steal a goose, but a dog raised an objection, and Sambo retired. The next night, during a thunder-shower, he attempted it again, and, just as he was on the point of getting away with his fowl, the lightening struck close by and nearly frightened him to death. Dropping the goose he started off muttering, "Pears to me dars heap of fuss bout a common goose."

The chaetodon, a beautiful fish of Japan, is endowed with a sort of gum to aid it in securing its prey. Seeing a fly lighted near the surface of the water, the fish gently approaches, and aiming its beak, forcibly blows a drop of water at the unsuspecting insect, knocking it from its perch into the water, where it is easily seized.

DEATH OF AN OLD PROSPECTOR.—The name of "Captain" John Moss is familiar in all mining camps in the Pacific States and Territories and Mexico, as that of one of the most enthusiastic and energetic of mining prospectors. His wanderings in search of mineral wealth extend into almost every nook and corner of the vast region described. But they have at last come to an end, as he died yesterday afternoon in this city. He was 55 years of age.—San Francisco Bulletin 12th.

The N. Y. World's special says: The State Department is engaged upon and has nearly completed the instructions to our new Minister to China, Angell. GETTING TIRED.

Those who have pinned their faith on the Comstock mines are evidently getting shaky, and tired of paying assessments with no dividends to be expected in the near future. The S. F. Alta of Sunday says:

There is no denying the situation relative to the Comstock lode. Burdens of the most oppressive character are daily levied upon our mining people with no signs of relief in sight. The continuation of the large and deep workings in these mines make them necessary and unavoidable. Therefore, there stares in the face of shareholders a continuation of assessments for a time indefinite; and how long are the poorer class to be able to meet these taxes are questions now arising. It therefore behooves mining capital to look into the merits of other localities than the Comstock, and the two ends can be accomplished—that of opening new mining districts, and the means of furnishing capital to continue the exploring of the Comstock lode.

That the Comstock is losing ground in the estimation of mining men is patent to all who have kept themselves posted regarding mining operations on this coast, and it is apparent that pastures are now being sought for by those who prefer the business of mining to that of any other for "big results." There are outside mining districts that are much more inviting to capitalists than the Comstock, and they are awakening to the fact, much to the interest of those districts that have been clamoring for capital, but have been given the cold shoulder, the great Comstock overtopping all others. We have in the Bodie district scores of mining claims that only require capital to make them paying properties. These claims are held by poor men, and can be bought on favorable terms, the owners having such faith in them that they would not refuse to take stock in companies formed to open them up. Many of these claims are contiguous to many that now stand high in the estimation of mining men, and in the hands of good companies who will work them economically, they are as liable to turn out as valuable properties as any we have in the district. And the Homer District, better known as the Mill Creek District, undoubtedly offers great inducements to the capitalists in quest o mining property, and in that district, too, the investor can find opportunities to invest in mining ventures on good terms. Mono county is destined to be one of the greatest—if not the greatest—mining county in the State. Much prospecting will be done in the Mammoth, Homer, Indian, and other districts, in this county the coming summer, and capitalists will find no better opportunities for investing their capital with a better show of early returns, than can be found right here in Bodie and our county.

LIEU LANDS.—Congressman Berry was yesterday to introduce a bill to construe the Acts of March 3d, 1853, and July 3d, 1866, granting school lands of the State of California. He says it is substantially the same measure that Page introduced some months ago, and that it provides for giving the State lieu lands for all sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections within her border which for any cause, except by reason of mineral character, she has not yet obtained. The bill does not waive the State's claim to sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections found to be mineral, but leaves the controverted question untouched

The Society voted its thanks to the Ladies Relief Society of this city, for the social to be given to-morrow evening for the benefit of Hon. R. D. Ferguson, one of its members, who has been sick for several months nigh unto death's door. The Bodie Minstrels tendered their services for a benefit to the Society's treasury, which was accepted with its thanks for their generosity.

A TRIP OF INSPECTION.—The Carson Tribune, of Monday, says: Yerington and Bliss started yesterday morning on a trip of inspection of the proposed Bodie road and route. Relays of horses were ordered, and the gentlemen will go quickly over the route. Doubtless something definite will be decided upon on their return, and the time given for the purposed start in building the road.

COURT PROCEEDINGS.—In Justice Peterson's Court Ah Yok, for petty larceny, was discharged.

In Justice Newman's Court James Crockett, for misdemeanor, was continued til Friday afternoon at 5 o'clock. Ah Wee, for selling liquor to Indians, plead guilty and will be sentenced this afternoon.

CRUEL.—Some three months ago we had a lot of wood covered by snow. That wood cost $12 per cord. Now it having advanced to $20, we congratulated ourselves that we had not burned it. Yesterday we dug it out, and within two hours it was all stolen. The curses of this office are heaped upon the thief.

ANOTHER BRICK.—It is in contemplation to erect a two story brick building on Upper Main street.

SUPERIOR JUDGE.—This bill has passed to a third reading in the Senate, but it will probably never reach the Governor.

PERSONAL.—T. S. Harris publisher of the Standard, arrived this morning.

A young Maine farmer, whose new wife, a highly cultured Boston girl, well up in geology and mineralogy, disappointed him by rambling over the farms, pecking at the rocks instead of attending to the milk and eggs, experienced a complete revolution in his feelings when she discovered gold, and he was told that his farm was worth $50,000.

P. McCalan, an old citizen of Oroville, died on Friday last from the effects of injuries received the day before. He was riding after stock, when his horse reared up and fell over backward. The pummel of the saddle struck him in the pit of the stomach.

Joseph Widmer, seven feet in hight, the tallest man in Missouri, died the other day. While serving in the war his Colonel, noticing that he stood head and shoulders, above all others, yelled out, "You rascal, get down from that stump."

A sad accident occurred at the mouth of Dutch Slough, a few miles up the river from Antioch last week. Robert Parnow, aged 16 years, fell overboard from the schooner William and Albert and was drowned.

A farmer remarked to a purchaser of hay in Genoa recently, who expostulated about the price, "that hay was hay now." The purchaser answered that he was glad of it as the last load was straw and weeds.

A church nearly completed in Moscow has cost over $3,000,000. Dome and cross are thickly plated with gold, and it is calculated that millions of this metal are on Russian church roofs.

It is claimed that the Sawyer electric lamp is an improvement on the systems of Brush and Edson, and can be adapted for use in the household.

At Downington, Pa., Saturday, two men were killed and twelve injured by an explosion of dynamite.

There are 150 prisoners in the Nevada State Prison.

The Gold Hill News has entered upon its thirty-fourth volume.

It is easy to breakfast in bed if you will be satisfied with a few rolls and a turnover.

An official order has been published at Louisville, Ky., issued by Postmaster-General Key, restoring the use of the mails to R. C. Wintersmith, Supervisor of the Frankfort School Fund Lottery.

This does not look as though the law against using the mails for lottery purposes will be enforced.

The dwelling-house of Lewis Rogers, near the San Gabriel Mission, Los Angeles, was destroyed by fire on Sunday last. Mr. Rogers is missing, and is supposed to have perished in the flames. Murder and arson are suspected.
